Perhaps more than anyone else I know, Ann cares about animals. Her affection for them is all-_____, extending even to animals others find less appealing, such as rats, which she keeps as pets. Because she loves animals, Ann hates to see them caged. She objects to anything that _____s any creature’s movements. This explains a(n) _____ of hers: she lets her pet white rats run freely throughout her apartment.

Ann’s view of cages has also led to a strong _____ toward zoos. If Ann had _____over all the zoos in the world, she would make them illegal and _____ all the animals from their captivity. Many people will argue that zoos protect animals, but Ann scoffs at this idea, saying it’s _____ because animals often die when they are being trapped for zoos or shipped to zoos. She believes that the most _____ life in the wild is preferable to the safest life in captivity.

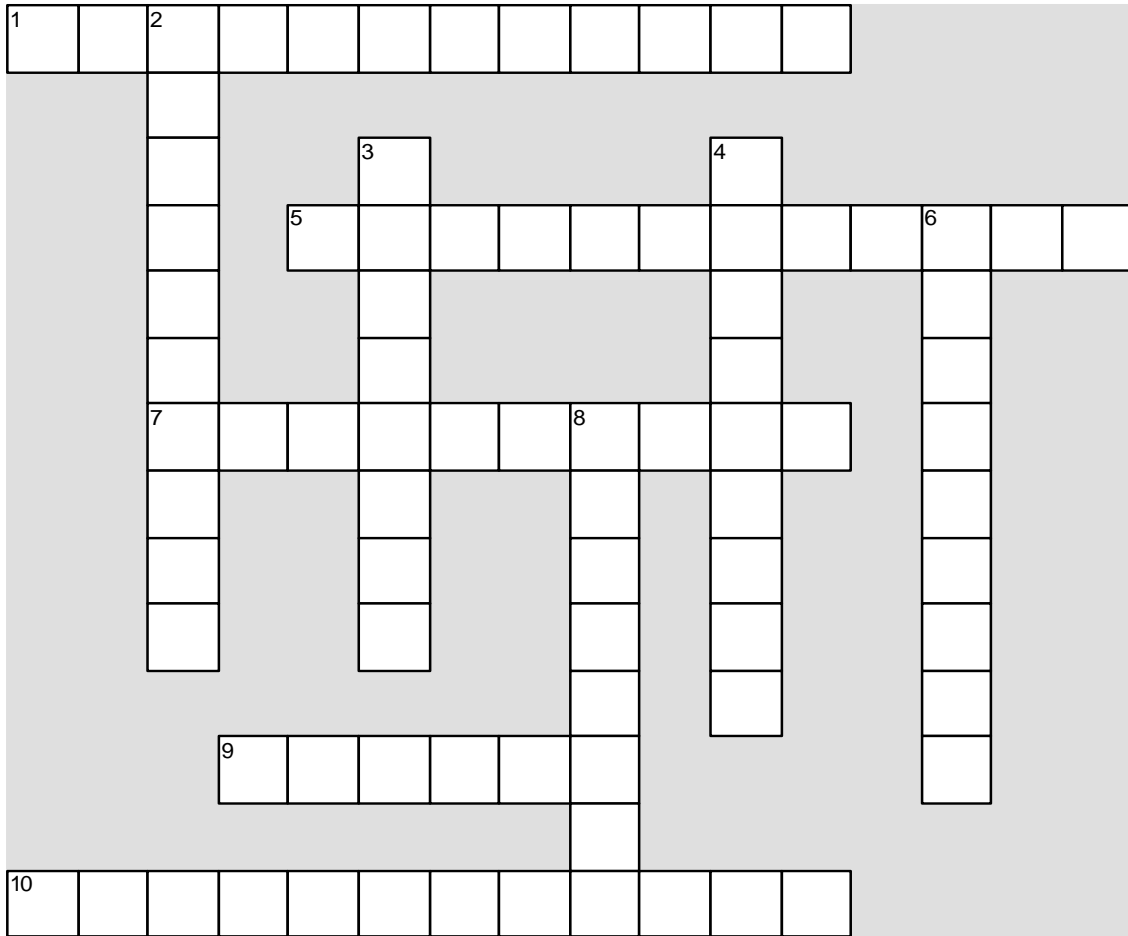

Of course, Ann realizes that her utopia—a society with no cages or zoos—is far from _____. Nevertheless, her spirit has not been squelched, and she continues to _____ freeing the animals in the hope that someday the zoos will close their gates forever.
