

William Humphrey
Open Range Grill Restaurant Review

“Open Range Grill” is a restaurant located at the high-point of Ogallala, Nebraska, and looks over all the citizens of the town, enticing them to come on in and try their amazing food.

I walked into Open Range Grill and was immediately greeted by the smell of fried onions and the smell of true American burgers. The menu and the food are all nicknamed after animals or plants one could find on “The Range.” I ordered the famous Coyote Burger, which comes with pico de gallo, pepperjack, and guacamole. As I sank my teeth into the fresh, brown bun and freshly butchered beef, I absorbed the amazingly tasty and mouth-watering flavors that the burger possessed. As I sadly finished the juicy burger, I moved onto the side of fries. The texture of the fries was perfect. The fries were golden brown and crunchy on the outside, which equally balanced out the amazing inner layer of juicy potato. The waiter came to give us our check. We thanked the waiter for his excellent and gracious service at our table. I walked out the door still wanting more of the amazing food and great service.

Open Range Grill is a perfect place for a large group of people, or just a night out with you and your significant other. The restaurant was amazingly balanced with courteous waiters and fast service, and food that explodes with flavor in your mouth. Open Range Grill is the best place to get a true American burger.

