

Jaiden Coudeyras and Hailey Schaaf
UNL Husker Volleyball

Director of Operations, Lindsay Wischmeier Peterson, plays an important part in the University of Nebraska Husker Women's Volleyball Program. As director of operations, Peterson organizes many aspects of the volleyball program. She sets up the meals and hotels, schedules flights and bus rides for the volleyball team's players and coaches. She meets with the marching department, people in charge of the lights, and the event staff. She organizes the Husker volleyball camps and clinics. Peterson also sets up Coach John Cook's schedule.

Peterson works from 9-6:30 on weekdays during the volleyball season. On home game days, Peterson's schedule is between 11-midnight. In the off-season, she works from 9-5. During volleyball clinics, she is at the Devaney Sports Center from 6:30 in the morning to 9 at night.

As a college student, Peterson played for the Nebraska Volleyball Team. She played as a defensive specialist. As a student and player, she had great support in her classes. She had to be more organized and did not get the experiences of a normal college student because of volleyball. "College was the best four years of my life. I loved playing at a high level and all of the new relationships," Peterson said. She believes college and volleyball helped form her into a better person. It taught her how to set goals, achieve them, and manage her time.

Peterson has been affiliated with the Nebraska Volleyball Team for a total of 16 years. She has been part of four out of the five national volleyball championships at the University of Nebraska.

"I get to work with some highly motivated and determined young women everyday. We have a huge fan base and lots of support," Peterson said about the perks of her job.

Next time you are watching a Husker Volleyball game, you might be able to spot Lindsay Peterson on the bench doing what she loves.