1. Describe a problem and ask for solutions in resolving a conflict. Make sure to stay in character and write what the character would write.

2. Discuss an issue of importance, such as violence, parents, siblings, life struggles, and explain the character’s feelings on the subject.

3. Imagine you are contacting a character after the end of a specific chapter, and you want to predict what has happened to the character and ask questions about another character’s life.

4. Explain an incident from the book where an event dramatically changed that character’s life and taught him/her something. The letter could be directed to a character from another book or story where there was a similar change in character.

5. Relate several incidents, clues, and foreshadowing that a character used to help solve a problem, mystery, or adventure. The character could be writing the letter to a minor character or character you make up who was unable to follow the case.
